25TH ANNIVERSARY!

LITERATURE AND MEDICINE

RITA CHARON and MAURA SPIEGEL, Editors-in-Chief, Columbia University

For twenty-five years, Literature and Medicine has been devoted to exploring interfaces between literary and medical knowledge and understanding. Issues of illness, health, medical practice, trauma, and the body are examined through literary and cultural texts. The journal showcases the creative and critical work of renowned physician writers, leading literary scholars, and medical humanists. Readership includes scholars of literature, history, and critical theory, as well as health professionals. Special issues in such areas as health and environment and the art of case narrative have become essential references to scholars. "Difference and Identity" (Vol. 23, #1), edited by Jonathan M. Metz and Suzanne Poirier, was selected by CELJ (Council of Editors of Learned Journals) as runner-up for the Best Special Issue of 2004. Literature and Medicine features one thematic and one general issue each year.

PERSPECTIVES IN BIOLOGY AND MEDICINE

ROBERT L. PERLMAN and RICHARD L. LANDAU, Editors, The University of Chicago

ALAN N. SCHECHTER, Associate Editor, National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases, NIH

Perspectives in Biology and Medicine is an interdisciplinary scholarly journal; our readers include biologists, physicians, students, and scholars in other disciplines who are interested in biology and medicine. The journal publishes essays that place important biological or medical subjects in broader scientific, social, or humanistic contexts—essays that provide the authors' "perspectives" on the issues they discuss. These essays span a wide range of subjects, from biomedical topics such as neurobiology, genetics, and evolution, to history, philosophy, and medical education and practice. The editors encourage an informal style that has literary merit and that preserves the warmth, excitement, and color of the biological and medical sciences.
