First Issue of Feminist Formations Journal on the Way

The first issue of the journal Feminist Formations will arrive soon with essays on feminist, gender, and sexuality studies, book reviews and a new section dedicated to critical examinations of teaching and leading within academic environments.

An interdisciplinary, peer-reviewed journal published by the Johns Hopkins University Press, Feminist Formations publishes three issues per year with groundbreaking work by scholars, activists, and educators. The journal begins its new life after publishing as the National Women’s Studies Association Journal for more than 20 years. The change was announced in January 2010.

“We are proud and excited to present a renewed resource for those of us who are interested in and informed by feminist knowledge and action as it shapes the fields of Women’s Studies, Gender Studies and Sexuality Studies,” writes Editor Rebecca Ropers-Huilman and Editorial Board President Adela C. Licona in the introduction to the new issue.

In addition to the new name and look, the journal has established an increased online presence. Feminist Formations has its own Facebook page, and the journal web page is available at http://www.cehd.umn.edu/feminist-formations.

“We have been working intensely to enrich the resources of Feminist Formations throughout the transition,” Ropers-Huilman says. “We appreciate the support of our readers and look forward to future opportunities to collaborate in enriching our field.”
