Colonialism Journal Welcomes New Editor

With its 12th year of publishing on the horizon, the Journal of Colonialism and Colonial History has made an editorial change. Clare Anderson from the University of Warwick in Coventry, England, has replaced journal founder Patricia Romero.

The online-only journal is published by the Johns Hopkins University Press and features three issues a year. Interdisciplinary in nature and global in scope, JCCH includes articles drawn from the tenth century to modern times dealing with aspects of colonialism and imperialism in the broadest sense.

“I’m happy to turn the position over to such a dynamic scholar as Clare Anderson,” said Romero, Professor of History at Towson University. “I am delighted that she will be at the helm, and I join the readers and Editorial Board in looking forward to her stewardship.”

Anderson is Associate Professor (Reader) at Warwick, where she is also Director of Research in the Department of Sociology. She has held personal research fellowships from the ESRC and National Maritime Museum, Greenwich, and is currently principal investigator on the interdisciplinary ESRC grant “Integrated Histories of the Andamans.” She serves on the editorial advisory board of Cultural and Social History and is also on the executive committee of the British Association for South Asian Studies.

She received her undergraduate and doctoral degrees at the University of Edinburgh, and previously worked in the Department of Economic and Social History at the University of Leicester. Her research interests focus on South Asia and the Indian Ocean during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

“Having previously published in JCCH, I understand its importance to the academy in crossing geographical and disciplinary borders and welcome the opportunity to lead the journal,” Anderson said. “I’m enormously grateful to Pat Romero for her leadership and support as we all look forward to cementing JCCH’s position as one of the major journals in the area of colonial studies.”
