JHU Press Announces Two New Journal Titles

The Johns Hopkins University Press has announced two additions to its collection of journals for 2012. The titles bring JHUP’s collection to 70 journals.

The first new title is German Studies Review, the official journal of the German Studies Association. Sabine Hake from the University of Texas at Austin, serves as the journal’s editor.

The journal publishes articles and book reviews in history, literature, culture studies, political science, as well as interdisciplinary topics relating to the German-speaking areas of Europe encompassing primarily, but not exclusively, Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. Articles and reviews are published in English or German. Each quarterly issue contains at least six articles and sixty book reviews.

The second title is Digital Philology, a new journal. With an editorial team of Nadia Altshuler (Executive Editor) and Stephen G. Nichols (Founding Editor) from the Johns Hopkins University and Albert Lloret (Managing Editor) from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, the journal will seek to reveal alternative modes of contact for medieval scholars, librarians, and archivists specializing in medieval studies and medieval texts, made possible by the emergence of digital resources and by engagement with the Digital Humanities.

Published twice a year beginning in 2012, Digital Philology includes scholarly essays, manuscript studies, and reviews of relevant resources such as websites, digital projects, and books.

About The Johns Hopkins University Press
Founded in 1878, The Johns Hopkins University Press is recognized as one of the world’s finest and most accomplished scholarly publishers. Today, in addition to a broad catalog of titles, The Press publishes more than 70 scholarly periodicals and more than 200 new books each year in the arts and humanities, technology and medicine, higher education, history, political science, and library science.