

The MLN French issue will consider only original articles that have not been previously published elsewhere and that were not submitted simultaneously to another journal. Only in exceptional circumstances will English translations of articles originally written in another language be considered. Articles on subjects that fall outside the scope of the journal are rejected without review as soon as possible, normally within two weeks of receipt. Manuscripts found to be appropriate for the issue are reviewed by two readers with expertise in the subject matter of the submission; on occasion, an editor of MLN may serve as one of the readers.

The MLN French issue uses double-blind review for all manuscripts sent out to readers outside the editorial board, concealing the identity of the author from the reviewers and vice versa. Submissions will be assessed for their interest, originality, and accuracy and for their contribution to scholarship in the field and in the discipline. The Editors may recommend revisions to the authors of manuscripts accepted for the issue, on occasion making acceptance conditional on implementing the recommended changes; in other cases, the editors will decline to publish the submission in its present form but will encourage the author to revise it and resubmit it for consideration. This revised manuscript will be reviewed, whenever possible by one of the initial evaluators. The Editors of the MLN French issue strive to arrive at a verdict within four months. When no consensus emerges from the first two readers, the submission is evaluated by a third reader who may be external or internal to the MLN editorial board. Books reviews submitted to the MLN French issue are evaluated by the Managing Editor for appropriateness, interest, and timeliness, but are not sent out for review.
